THUMBnail

From dung beetles to tigers, moles to giraffes, horses to the human body, there is, seemingly, nothing that sculptor Hamish Mackie is not prepared to take on, his astonishing energy in tackling a vast range of wildlife and human subjects being reflected in his very particular ability to capture in bronze the intense, dynamic sense of life and movement particular to each. His new show at the

Hamish Mackie Tiger

Mall Galleries, entitled 'Life in Bronze 2016 Triennial Exhibition', seems almost more like a retrospective than the outcome of just three years of work but, in that time, Mackie has done research trips to India, Australia and Africa as well as completing a truly massive commission of galloping horses for a new London development, and all find their place here – a mastery modern animalier.
